Froome counts cost of victory

CHRIS Froome's stunning fourth Tour de France win came at a huge price – it will cost him almost £1.5million.

The cycling superstar picked up a cheque for £438,755 when he crossed the finish line on Sunday.

And he will be given £1m in bonuses by his sponsors for ending the Tour in the yellow jersey.

But tradition dictates the winner's money, including bonuses, is shared with team-mates and backroom staff who helped propel them to victory.

The cash will be paid directly to Team Sky and distributed to the riders and support workers.

A source said: "It is fair because no cyclist however good has even the slightest chance of victory on one of the Grand Tours without his support men."

"If those guys had not been laying their bodies on the line for you in the mountains and protecting you from the wind and other riders in the peloton... then you can kiss goodbye to finishing on top of the podium in Paris."

Froome, 32, is already worth an estimated £20m thanks to his £4m-a-year Sky salary and ad deals.

MALLORCA COPS BEAT BRITS WITH BATONS

'Shocking attack' on tourists

■ by ROSS KANIUK
SPANISH cops were last night blasted for being "heavy-handed" after whipping British holidaymakers – for singing.

Video footage shows a policeman running towards revellers and attacking them with a baton.

Witnesses said they also saw an officer whip clubbers at random as they stood in the road. Daniel Davis, who filmed the incident, said: "One of them had a leather whip, it was shocking."

The roofer, who is on holiday with his girlfriend and family, videoed the 4am bust-up as he left a bar in the Mallorca resort of Santa Ponsa at the weekend.

Problem

Daniel, 34, said: "Kids were chanting in the street. All of a sudden a car tried to get past and the police arrived."

"They came running in and were hitting everyone, they were so aggressive."

Officers tried to make Daniel delete the footage. But his phone battery ran out.

Spanish authorities have vowed to crack down on rowdy behaviour, with heavy fines for offenders.

But Daniel, from Cumbria, said: "There is a massive problem over there. The police do not like anybody."

"They didn't ask any questions, just got out the car, then bang, bang, bang. Girls were screaming: 'What the hell has just happened?'"

"I come to the same place every year and I've never seen anything like this before."
